COLONEL C. L. MATHIAS.
(PROMOTED TO BRIGADIER-GENERAL.)

Brigadier-General Charles L. Mathias was born at or near Branberg, Prov Pasen, Germany, May 31st, 1824. I first became acquainted with him at Burlington, Iowa, in 1857. He was then engaged as a merchant and was a leading spirit among his countrymen. About this time he organized or helped to organize a German military company called the "Black Rifles" and became its captain. This company existed until the breaking out of the civil war. He then organized what subsequently became Co. D of the 1st Iowa Infantry, and offered his services to the government. He was the first (it is claimed) in the state to offer his services, and that of Co. D, in response to the first call for volunteers, and accepted in May, being commissioned as captain May 9th. He was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of the 5th Iowa Infantry July 5th 1861, and after the death of Colonel Worthington was made colonel, May 25th, 1862. After the battles of Iuka and Corinth, having proved himself a man of courage and an officer that could secure from his men the best that they were capable of, he was commissioned brigadier-general, November 29, 1862. He took part in the engagements at New Madrid, Iuka, Corinth (siege and battles), Jackson, Vicksburg, and Mission Ridge. In the last of which, he received a wound which rendered it necessary for him to leave the service.

After the war he came back to Burlington and resumed his business. He also served one or two terms in the General Assembly, representing Des Moines county. He was beloved by all who knew him for his kindness of heart, consideration of others, especially the old comrades, and for his extreme generosity, the latter so much so that he died comparatively poor. His death took place in Burlington, Iowa, October 16, 1868. He now sleeps in our Aspen Grove cemetery, immediately north of the vault containing the remains of the late Major-General J. M. Corse. A beautiful monument erected by his friends, marks his last resting place.

SECRETARY GEORGE T. DITTO.
PRIVATE CO. I.

Secretary's Report.

THOSE of the Fifth Iowa Infantry that attended the regimental reunion at Des Moines, in September, 1895, will remember that the secretary was instructed to prepare a new roster. The information it would contain was the cause of much thought and study, also the manner in which it should be presented. As there was a desire on the part of many comrades for more of a history of the Fifth, he concluded to give, as far as he could secure them, the statistics of the regiment, doing so in as few words as would express the members' records.

This booklet is the result of his labors. If it is not satisfactory to all, and some feel that they have been slighted, be kind enough to believe that he has done the best he could. He had nothing to follow as a precedent. Had there been such he feels that the task would have been, comparatively speaking, an easy one.

The Secretary regrets that ill health has preventod its completion before this, but it was unavoidable.

Never since the Association was organized has he been more anxious to have all the men "accounted for," or worked harder to accomplish this result. His correspondence has been extensive. He has been in communication with all, both in and out of the regiment that could or would give hiw the desired information.

The list of those unaccounted for, has been greatly reduced, some by present postoffice being secured, others by death being reported. The list is yet too long.

The folder sent out early in the past year was the means of finding between forty and fifty. His correspondence with the adjutants of G. A. R. posts in Iowa and other states has found others. In all, nearly 1000 letters and postal cards have been sent out, a large percentage of which, he is sorry to say, are still unanswered. With those that are fixed in their habitation there is no trouble. Others seem to be uneasy and constantly "on the go" and to find them requires much writing and postage, for when writing to outsiders, return postage must go with the letter if you expect an answer. To illustrate, I will relate one case taken from many similar ones.

In making up the roster of 1891, I received a letter from a member in Illinois. My correspondence with him last season was returned to me. A comrade wrote that he had moved to Oregon, giving his postoffice. A letter sent to the place mentioned fell into the hands of his brother who wrote me that he was not in Oregon, that his friends believed him dead as they had not heard of him for years, with the request that if I found him to let them know. In the meantime I learned that the postoffice in Illinois had been discontinued. I wrote to the county-seat to find out where mail for that point was now sent, telling the adjutant of the post whom I wanted and why. The reply was, that office had been reopened and that the comrade wanted still lived there. A letter to him brought me the information required.

The Secretary has followed a comrade from Iowa to state after state, in some cases to Florida, in others to California, and may be, found him in a county joining the one he started from. Is it any wonder that his postage bills soon run up to a goodly sum, and that roster making at this time is a matter of work and patience ?

Many from time to time suggest the pension office at Washington as a good place from which to secure information. I have tried that several times, stating the object in view, and my letters have always been "respectfully returned." Comrades living there are not allowed to examine the records, and have no better success. No person is assigned for it. I have had to depend upon my own efforts with such help as comrades have been able to render.

In some instances my correspondence with friends of deceased comrades, concerning their death, has been the first intimation to them that their relatives were dead and my statement was doubted, although I afterwards proved it to be correct.

When the comrades realize the years that passed after disbandment and before the Association was organized, the large number of states from which members of the Fifth came (see nativity list), and the youth of many of them, they will see one reason why to-day they are so hard to find. Many when they enlisted had been in Iowa only a short time. Others were here as prospectors. With no thought that the war would become the terrible reality that it did, they enlisted. After three years of honorable service, the remnant of the Fifth returned to Iowa, wrecked in mind, body, and estate. After discharge they quickly scattered to far away homes, where loved ones awaited them. Since then they have built up homes in localities distant from their native state.

I find them in nearly every state from Washington in the northwest to Florida in the southeast; from New Mexico to Massachusetts. With some, time has not dealt kindly. Others have been successful in trade. Some in the learned professions have received from their fellow citizens plaudits of victory for work well done. Some have creditably filled seats in the legislative halls, both national and state. Wherever they are, they have never forgotten the friendships formed during their army life, or those with whom they spent those years of trial, and are proud of the fact that they belonged to the Fifth Iowa Infantry. Without exception one and all send hearty greetings of comradeship to all survivors.

The postoffice address of more comrades is here given than have been known at any time since the Fifth was disbanded, and I am very sorry to report the list of the dead largely increased since my last report.

The records at Des Moines have been searched for all the informa- they are able to give. I have not attempted to account for the men ept in present address of those living and the date and place of death those having died), beyond their service in the Fifth Infantry. A number that were discharged for sickness, with restored health joined other regiments.

The column headed "Captured," is to be read to the left to the column headed "Where;" else the column of "Remarks" would have been too much crowded. The usual reference points in the "Remarks" refer to the footnotes and the places of burial in National cemeteries and other places. All deaths concerning which positive information could not be secured have been marked as "Reported." All those not accounted during the life of the Fifth, are supposed to have been discharged when it was disbanded.

There is another point to which the secretary desires to call the attention of the comrades. He hopes it may refresh the memory of some one that can give the information desired.

Those killed at Iuka were buried in three trenches, that were shaped like the diagram.

No. 3.

1	I	K

No. 1.

No. 2.

1	A	B	C	D	E	F	G	H

In trench No. 1, grave No. 1, is that of Lieut. Shawl, Co. A. No. 2 is that of Lieut. Smith, of Co. K. Nos. 3 and 4 are those of Lieuts. Fisher and Holcomb of F. The other is unknown. Five men in all.

In trench No. 2, grave No. 1, is that of James Edgar of Co. A. The rest are unknown. Twenty-five men in all.

In trench No. 3, grave No. 1, is that of Samuel Hughes of Co. I. The rest are unknown. Seven men in all.

Three or four were buried in other places.

All of them are now buried among the unknown in the National Cemetery at Corinth, Miss., but are together. Can any one supply the missing list, or part of it, in order that all may be individualized? The secretary hopes that the portraits that have been introduced will meet the approval of the comrades. The number of them has been largely increased since it was first proposed. Many more were worthy of being used but the number had to be limited. The narratives have mostly been written by relatives. The likenesses of the escaped prisoners were sent me by Mrs. Marshall, of Chattanooga. The history of the escape and journey to "God's Country" was written and furnished by Lieut. Hoffman, of Co. D. I know that it is long, but to cut it down would spoil the excellent style in which it is written and destroy the connection between the different parts.

All who have in any way assisted the Secretary in getting the roster ready for publication have his most hearty thanks. He knows that when so many have lent aid that to mention names is unjust. Still in an especial manner he wishes to extend his thanks to Comrade Sergeant Smock, of Co. F, for his advice and financial aid, without which the work would have been a failure.

I believe that no one realizes the accelerating rapidity with which the old soldiers are passing away, more than the secretary of a regimental organization. No one member knows more of the infirmities of those remaining among us.

Many send word that they are not strong enough to travel so far, even if they had the money to enable them to attend the reunions. Some are so nearly blind that others must do their writing. Some feel the effects of disease, others that of wounds. To all such my warmest sympathies are extended.

Will all that receive a copy of this roster be kind enough to notify the Secretary, George T. Ditto, Blairstown, Benton Co., Iowa?

My work is now concluded. Allow me once more to thank all for courtesies extended in the years that are passed, as well as those of the present time. And, "May the Lord watch between me and thee when absent one from the other."

Very Truly Your Comrade.
George T. Ditto, Secretary.
Blairstown, Iowa.

AN EPITOMIZED
History of the Fifth Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

BY LIEUT. J. Q. A CAMPBELL.

The Fifth Iowa Volunteer Infantry Regiment was sworn into the United States service, at Burlington, Iowa, July 11, 1861, and left the State for the front, August 11, 1861. The companies, some of which were organized in April under the first call of President Lincoln for State troops, were sworn into the State service in June. The regiment was accepted under the call of the President, for additional troops, issued in May.

The Regiment was mustered into the United States service July 15, 1861, and mustered out July 30, 1864, except the veterans, who were transferred as Companies G and I to the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, with which they served to the close of the war.

The Regiment entered the field with 967 men, and received 89 recruits, during its service.

Its line of march began at Burlington, extended to St. Louis; thence up the Missouri to Booneville; from Boonville to Springfield, from Springfield to Boonville, Booneville through North Missouri to St. Louis; thence to Cairo, to New Madrid, to Fort Pillow, to Cairo, to Hamburg Landing, to Corinth, to Rienzi, to Ripley, to Rienzi, to Corinth, to Jacinto, to Iuka, to Jacinto, to Corinth, to Kossuth, to the Hatchie, to Rienzi, to Corinth, to Grand Junction, to Holly Springs, to Lagrange, to Moscow, to Holly Springs, to Oxford, to Yocona, to Oxford, to Memphis, to Lafayette, to Germantown, to Memphis, to the Arkansas and Louisiana line, to Helena, through Yazoo Pass, Coldwater and the Tallahatchie to Greenwood, back to Helena, to Milliken's Bend, to Richmond, to Hard Times Landing, to Bruinsburg, to Port Gibson, to Black River, to Utica, to Raymond, to Clinton, to Jackson, to Champion's Hill, to Vicksburg, to Big Black, to Jackson, to Clinton, to Vicksburg, to Helena, to Memphis, to Chickasaw, to Florence, to Fayetteville, to Winchester, to Decherd, to Battle Creek, to Bridgeport, to Chattanooga, to Graysville, to Bridgeport, to Larkinsville, to Huntsville, to Davenport, to Decatur, Alabama, to Chattanooga, to Kingston, Georgia; and included many minor movements.

It served—

In the States of Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia—

In the Departments commanded by Fremont; Pope, Halleck, Grant, and Sherman—

In the Armies of the Mississippi and the Tennessee—

In the Corps of McPherson and Logan—

In the Divisions of Schuyler Hamilton, C. S. Hamilton, Quincy Crocker, and John E. Smith—

In the Brigades of Buford, Sanborn, Mathias, and Boomer.

During its service it marched and traveled on boats and cars, 6,847 miles—more than five times the distance from St. Louis to the Gulf, and an average of more than six miles for every day of the three years it was in the service, Sundays included.

It assisted in the capture of nearly 50,000 prisoners.

It helped to open the Mississippi from Cairo to Bruinsburg, and took part in the several campaigns that drove the rebels from Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Northern Alabama, and Northern Georgia.

It assisted in the capture of Island No. 10, New Madrid, Fort Pillow, Corinth, Vicksburg, and many other places.

It took part in the sieges of of New Madrid, Corinth, and Vicksburg, and the Yazoo Pass expedition.

It took part in the campaign against Price in Missouri, against Island Ten and New Madrid, against Corinth into Central Mississippi, against Vicksburg, against Bragg, and against Atlanta.

It took part in the battles of Iuka, Corinth, Jackson, Champion's Hill, Vicksburg, and Mission Ridge, and was in support at the battles of Port Gibson, Raymond, and Black River, and under fire at New Madrid, and the siege of Corinth.

During its service it was under fire fifty days.

It fought rebel troops from the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky, Missouri, Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina.

Its casualties were: 65 killed, 39 mortally wounded, 98 died of disease, 237 discharged for disability, 260 wounded, 102 captured.

Only two, out of the fifty-seven regiments from Iowa, had as many officers killed and mortally wounded in action as the Fifth; while we lost only one officer from disease.

Only four regiments from Iowa lost more enlisted men killed in battle than the Fifth—only eight lost more in killed and wounded—while no regiment but the 19th, till after the 40th, lost as few in the service by disease; while for its time of service, the number discharged from the Regiment was not above the average.

From the time we reached Keokuk, the Regiment was at the front during its whole term of service, and at the immediate front except during the Atlanta campaign, when it was on duty guarding the railroad and the Etowah river, near Kingston, Georgia.

It soldiered on the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Osage, the Ohio, the Tennessee, the Coldwater, the Tallahatchie, the Hatchie, the Big Black, the Pearl, the Tuscumbia, and Etowah rivers.

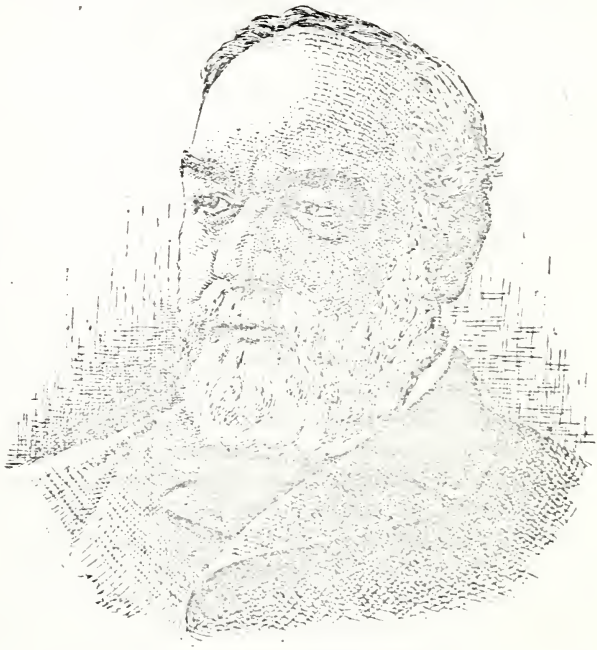
It had the good fortune never to be in a campaign or battle in which the Union Army was defeated.

In every Department that it served, success crowned the Union arms. First it was with Fremont, when he drove Price out of Missouri; with Pope when he opened the Mississippi to Fort Pillow, with Halleck when he captured Corinth, with Grant when he captured Vicksburg and defeated Bragg at Mission Ridge, and under Sherman when he drove the rebels from Chattanooga to Atlanta.

The battle of Franklin, Tennessee, is considered one of the bloodiest conflicts of the war. Yet there was no Union regiment in that battle whose losses would compare with that of the Fifth Iowa, at Iuka. The 44th Missouri's losses at Franklin were greater than those of any other Union regiment. Yet its losses compare with the losses of the Fifth Iowa, as follows:

	Killed.	Wounded.	Missing.	Total.
Fifth Iowa at Iuka.....	40	175	2	217
Forty-fourth Missouri at Franklin	34	37	92	163

Taking all these things into consideration—its service at the front, the great distance it marched and traveled, the number of states in which it served, its heavy losses in battle, its light losses from disease, the number of prisoners it assisted in capturing, and its good fortune in being a part of armies that were in every case victorious,—and there was perhaps no regiment from Iowa that has a better record than the Fifth Infantry.



MAJOR W. S. ROBERTSON.

William Stephenson Robertson, late professor of theory and practice of medicine and of clinical medicine in Iowa State University, was born at Georgetown, Lancaster Co., Penn., June 5th, 1831. He was the son of Dr. James Moore Robertson and Maria nee Armstrong, the former of Scotch and the latter of English ancestry. He was a student at Knox College, Illinois; and graduated in medicine from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in March, 1856. In the same year he located in Columbus City, Iowa, his old home, where he began the practice of his chosen profession. He remained in Columbus City for twelve years. He spent the winters of 1868-69 in the hospitals of New York City under the direction of Professor Frank H. Hamilton, M. D. In the spring of 1869 he moved to Muscatine, Iowa. At the organization of the Medical Department of the Iowa State University, he was offered the chair of theory and practice of medicine and clinical medicine, which he accepted and occupied until his death.

At the outbreak of the rebellion he raised the first company of volunteers that was recruited in the state and tendered them to the government, but for some reason that has never been made public they were not accepted. On the 13th of June, 1861, he was mustered into the Army as major of the Fifth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, being present and participating in every march, siege, skirmish and battle of that gallant regiment till the 23rd of July, 1862.

He was one of the original stockholders and a member of the first board of directors of the Muscatine Waterworks Co. In 1873 while acting as city and county physician of Muscatine Co., his attention was specially attracted by the sad condition of the feeble minded children then in the county poor house, and for the first time realized the fact that the State had no provision for the care of this unfortunate class. Deeply impressed with the need of some munificent arrangement for this class he brought the subject before the State Medical Society, but receiving no active assistance he again presented it to them and Dr. Robertson was appointed a special committee of one to present the subject to the legislature. He accordingly drafted a bill to guide in the formation of a law, and prepared a "Plea for the Feeble-minded Children of Iowa" which he had printed at his own expense and given to each member of the legislature. To this action is due the fact that Iowa has now a magnificent institution in successful operation located at Glenwood, Mills Co., for the maintenance and education of this class of unfortunates.

He was a devoted member of the Presbyterian church.

On the 10th of June, 1856, he married Miss Anna Elizabeth Charlton, a lady of high culture and refinement born in Cattaraugus Co., New York, but of English parentage. Of five children born to them but two are living.

Major Robertson died at his home, January 20th, 1887. As a physician he was prompt to respond to the call of duty, and was faithful "even unto death."

Major William Stanhope Marshall was born in Richland Co., Ohio, March 17th, 1832, and died at Chattanooga, Tennessee, on the 27th of January, 1891.

Our comrade came of good old Revolutionary stock, his paternal grandfather being an officer in the Pennsylvania line; and a treasure highly prized by the Major was a sword presented to the grandfather by General Washington for meritorious service.

Major Marshall graduated from Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, in the class of 1856. He taught school for a few months in Louisiana. He then went to Independence, Iowa, there studied law and was admitted to the bar. Upon the breaking out of the Rebellion he promptly enlisted July 15th, 1861, and was mustered into the service as second lieutenant of Co. E, 5th Iowa Infantry, serving with his regiment in Southwest Missouri in the fall of the same year. He served under General Pope at New Madrid and Island No. 10 in the spring of 1862, being the Q. M. of the Fifth. He served under General Halleck at the siege of Corinth; under General Rosecrans at Iuka and battle of Corinth in the fall of 1862, and was appointed adjutant of the Fifth regiment November 3rd of the same year. He took part in the Yazoo expedition in the early spring of 1863, and was promoted to be major of the Fifth, April 25th, 1863. He served under General Grant in the battles around Vicksburg and in the siege and assault of that stronghold. With his regiment he went with the Fifteenth Corps (to which the Fifth was now attached, having been transferred from the Seventeenth Corps) when it was ordered to Chatanooga after the battle of Chickamauga, and with about one half of the Fifth was captured near the tunnel at the battle of Mission Ridge, November 25th, 1863.

This terminated his service in the field, for he was not exchanged. While a prisoner of war he was confined at Libby, Va., Macon, Ga., Charleston and Columbia, South Carolina. For two months, in 1864, he with other officers was at Charleston under the fire of our own guns. At one time he made his escape from a railroad train, but was shortly recaptured.

On the 28th of November, 1864, he with other officers of the Fifth (see article "A Break for Liberty") made his escape from Columbia, South Carolina. After a most eventful journey through the mountains of South and North Carolina and Tennessee, he reached the Union lines at Sweetwater, Tennessee, on the 1st of January, 1865.

The experiences of our comrade during his long prison life, were most interesting, and the history of his escape forms one of the most thrilling episodes of the great Rebellion. It was seldom, however, that he could be induced to talk of this period of his life, and few, save his intimate friends knew anything of this remarkable chapter in his history.

Of all the gallant men led by General Sherman in the long march from the Mississippi at Vicksburg by way of Memphis to the Tennessee river at Chattanooga, there were none in the long array that had a braver or nobler record than the Major of the Fifth Iowa Infantry.

How many good things we could truthfully say of our comrade! A God fearing man, kindly affectionate and true to his friends, pure and sweet in his domestic life, he was a type of the highest character of American citizens who, a generation ago, took up arms at their country's call.

After he was mustered out, he went to Tennessee, resumed the practice of law, and from 1867 to the date of his death, with the exception of a year and a half passed in Lincoln, Nebraska, he was a citizen of Chattanooga. Such, briefly, is the history of a very unusual man.

It is difficult to speak in fit terms of Major Marshall without the danger of being charged by those unacquainted with him, with exaggerating his merits and ability.

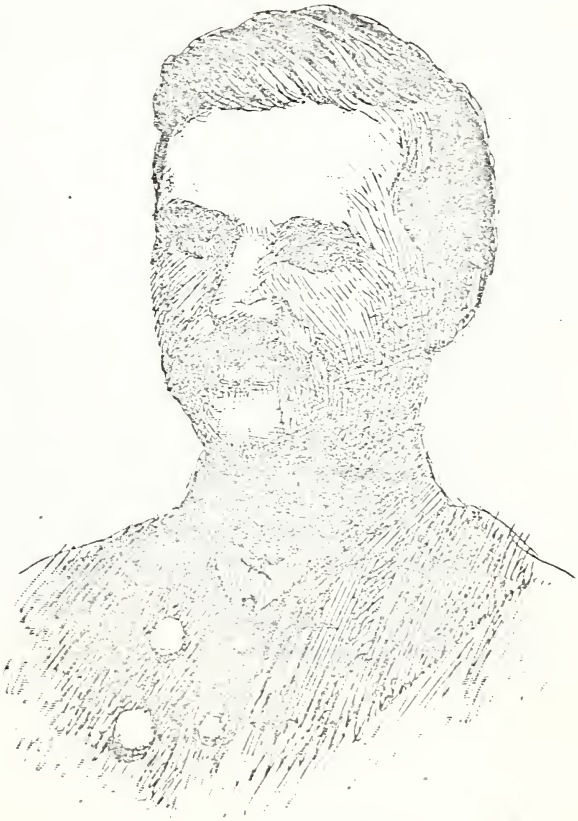
He was the soul of honor, and his integrity was absolutely spotless. No one ever accused him of a dishonorable act, or capable of harboring a dishonorable thought. His word no one ever disputed. While retiring in his disposition, never pushing himself forward, those who knew him well, knew that he was possessed of a courage that never faltered or flinched in time of danger. While a man of very decided views, political or otherwise, never conceding them, he possessed unfailing tact, and made no enemies. Every one was ready to speak well of Major Marshall, and there was no period of his life calling for an apology.

He was a man of very unusual ability. Possessing a mind clear, discriminating, and analytical, few lawyers are better equipped in their profession than he; and there were few lawyers whose legal opinions were entitled to and did receive more respect than his.

In 1868 he married a Miss Bryant of Independence, Iowa. She lived but a few months. In 1873 he married Miss Kate S. Montague, of Chattanooga, who survives him.

Such is a brief epitome of the life of our comrade. Even from this it will be readily seen that his life was no ordinary life. But we that knew him so well in the camp, on the march, in the strife of battle, and in the social walks of life, knew that Major W. S. Marshall was no ordinary man.

ARRANGED BY THE SECRETARY.



W. H. DARROW.
ASSISTANT SURGEON.

William H. Darrow was born in Summit Co., Ohio, on the 17th day of August, 1838. His father moved to Louisa Co., Iowa, when he was eight years of age. His time until his sixteenth year was employed in assisting his father at his occupation of blacksmith, and in a desultory attendance at the village school. At the age of sixteen years he entered the drug store of Dr. Wm. H. Colton at Columbus City. In 1860 he attended medical lectures at Keokuk, Iowa, and upon returning to his home with his diploma in his pocket, formed his plans for a peaceful life at his chosen profession; frustrated by the threatened disruption of the country. He at once with characteristic impulsiveness enlisted as a private in Captain J. L. Grubb's Co., then being recruited in his native town. The company was bivouaced at Camp Warren near Burlington, Iowa, and on the 16th day of July, 1861, was sworn into the service of the United States as Company C, of the Fifth Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

Dr. Darrow's training as a druggist and physician, together with his kindly and sympathetic nature, soon secured for him a place among his sick comrades, and on September 15th, 1861, he was made hospital steward. In April, 1862, he was promoted to additional assistant surgeon, and in September, 1862, was promoted to assistant surgeon, which position he filled with marked ability and satisfaction to his comrades until his discharge from the service on the 24th day of September, 1864.

Dr. Darrow was wounded by a gun shot at Jackson, Mississippi, and was stunned by a cannon shot at Champion's Hill. The latter injury seriously affecting his nervous system during the balance of his life. His death occurred at Columbus Junction, Iowa, on the 15th day of July, 1894. His funeral was under the auspices of the G. A. R., and at his request (made several months previous), a comrade of the Fifth delivered a short eulogy over his remains.

James R. Smith, Co. "C."
Columbus Junction, Iowa.

Lieutenant-Colonel Ezekiel S. Sampson was born in Huron county, Ohio, December 6th, 1831, and came to Keokuk county, Iowa, in 1843. His education was obtained at the public schools and some three years attendance at the high school of Professor Howe at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, and one year at Knox College, Galesburg, Illinois. He studied law at Oskaloosa in the office of Eastburn & Rice and commenced the practice in Sigourney in 1856. He was prosecuting attorney of Keokuk county for two years. He volunteered in April, 1861, but was not mustered into the service until in July, when he became captain of Co. F, Fifth Iowa, which position he held until September, 1862, when he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, which rank he held when mustered out in September, 1864. After the war he resumed the practice of the law at Sigourney, Iowa, where he resided until his death which occurred upon the 7th day of October, 1892. In the meantime he had been a member of the State Senate and from January 1st, 1867, until January 1st, 1875, was district judge of the Sixth Judicial District. He was member of the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses retiring on March 1st, 1879. From that time until his death he was engaged in the practice of the law in Sigourney, Iowa. He left surviving him his widow, Eunice E. Sampson, and seven children, all of whom are still living.

STORY OF PRISONERS' ESCAPE.

BY MICHAEL HOFFMAN.

[TAKEN FROM HIS HOME PAPER.]

CHAPTER I.

SOME thirteen years ago, through the Courier columns, we gave an account of our five months' experience in Libby prison, at which time we stated that at some future day we would write with regard to other prisons, including our escape. In doing this, we think best to go back to where we were first taken prisoner, in order to make our story plain. We shall only refer to Libby and the other prisons, and write the most about our escape. If the story is not interesting, the reader may rest assured that it will be correct, for we copy largely from a diary that we carried all through the prison—and the war, in fact.

We, with about three hundred other Union soldiers, were taken prisoners at battle of Mission Ridge, near Chattanooga, Tenn., on Nov. 25th, 1863, and after riding through Rebeldom in box and cattle cars for thirteen days we landed at Richmond, Va. Here we were divided, the men put on Belle Island, and the officers, thirteen in number, were put into Libby prison. There were already in the prison nearly one thousand officers from all parts of the Union army, who had been captured during the summer, the most of them at the battles of Gettysburg and Chickamauga.

In the spring of 1864, General Grant was moving on Richmond pretty strong, and for safer keeping they sent the men from Belle Island to Andersonville, Ga., while the Libbyites were hauled to Macon, Ga. Here we were kept for two and one-half months, when General Grant crowded us again close, so they removed the officers from Macon to Charleston, S. C., where we were kept for two and one-half months, and then taken to Columbia, S. C. Of this prison we give a brief description, because from here we made our exit for escape. The prison was located two miles up the river, northwest of the city. It was a prison without previous preparation of any kind—only a patch of ground of about three acres, covered with small pine trees. Between this and the river the pine timber was quite thick. No shelter of any kind. The ground for a floor. The sky for a roof. The prison patch was guarded by a line of rebel soldiers at a distance of twenty-five feet apart, or, say seventy-five guards in the entire circle. This constituted the prison in which they put about one thousand of us on Oct. 6th, 1864. The only shelter we had was of our own making. Some had excavations in the ground, over which they had built a covering of brush and dirt. Others had blankets and canvas stretched over a fly-pole. These were promiscuously located all over the camp without any system whatever.

The camp was known as Camp Sorghum from the liberal supply of sorghum molasses furnished us by the rebels. Sorghum, with the coarse-ground corn meal, was the only food furnished us, except once in a while a little rice and salt—about twice a week.

In the prison at Charleston we had about forty big sheet-iron camp kettles. When we left there we supposed the rebels would send them along. But this they neglected to do, and if some of our boys had not been thoughtful and taken about a dozen with them we would have had a sorry time, with our meals. If ever a set of cooking utensils fully did duty it was these twelve kettles. They were busy from early morn until night. For convenience the camp was divided off into messes. Our mess would get a turn at the camp kettle about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when we would have hot mush and sorghum for supper, cold mush and sorghum for breakfast and dinner. We ate lots of it and did not kick much either. The only trouble with it was that sorghum had too much of the laxative qualities, which, when mixed with the mush, made pretty lively food. This was, by all odds, the worst of any of the prisons we were in, as far as the rebels were concerned, although this condition of things was relieved a little by those of us who were fortunate enough to have a little rebel money. The rebs outside fared much better. We could buy of them, and very often did. A soup bone that here costs us from 15c to 20c, would cost us $3; a head of cabbage $1, $2, and $3; a large sweet potato, 25c; peanuts, 50c per cup. These prices, of course, were in Confederate money. This money the prisoners would get in various ways—new prisoners would bring some in; a pair of officers' boots with red tops could readily be traded for a pair of home-tanned red rebel shoes which would probably wear just as long, and get in addition $50 to $75, the buttons off an officers' coat would bring $5 apiece. These were Yankee notions of which the rebs had none, and they, rather liked.

The boys were always studying up some mad [illegible] of escape. The trouble was that when anyone got outside the prison, bloodhounds would soon be on his track and he would be brought back in a few hours.

However, if one got out without the rebels knowing it, or without any disturbance, the chances were one to two on getting into the Union lines. Captain Dirks, the oldest prisoner in camp, tried one dark night to crawl out, but the guard saw him and shot him in the leg. The captain was taken outside to a hospital, and we have never since heard of him.

On a number of occasions, along about midnight, some fellows made runs right through the line expecting that before the guard could recover his gun and shoot with any certainty, he would be too far away to hit. They generally succeeded, but the next day blood-hounds would be on their track, and they would be brought back the worse for wear. It was necessary for us to have wood to cook our mush. The rebels would not bring us any but they would parole from twenty to thirty of the prisoners every day to go into the timber close by, cut the wood, carry it in, and lay it right over and inside the dead line. The prisoners inside would take it from there. This parole allowed us to go within described limits. Beyond this, as the parole read, "was the liability of being shot."

There were all manners and means of escape devised, so on the afternoon of Nov. 24th, 1864, Maj. W. S. Marshall, Capt. John E. Page, and myself, thought we would try our plan. In our shirt sleeves, with an ax and maul, and a couple of wooden wedges, we walked up to guard No. 1, where all the passing out and in was done, he being a new guard just placed there a few minutes before, and asked permission to pass out again. This he refused to give. We told him we had a right to go out; that we belonged to the paroled party. The guard could not see it that way, so we asked him if he would not call the officer of the day, whose tent was some few rods away. This he did. The old rebel with butternut suit and broad-rimmed hat came up and demanded to know the trouble. We told him about the same story we told the guard, "that we were on parole that day to cut wood; that we had got hungry and came in to get something to eat." As we expected, he asked us our names. We had the name business all fixed in advance. Marshall gave his name as Major Briggs, 16th Illinois Cavalry; Page's assumed name we have forgotten; while I give my name as Lieut. Applebee. These men, whose names we assumed, were close mess-mates of ours, and we knew them well. They were then legally paroled, and at this time were out cutting wood. We put on such a bold front and told such an apparently straight story that the old "secesh" actually believed it. We thought we could work the old fellow, for he did not look as though he knew it all. He pulled his parole book out of his pocket, which contained the names of the paroled for that day, and sure enough there were the names of Maj. Briggs, Lieut. Applebee, and the other fellow. This, to his mind, confirmed our story, so he said: "Guard let 'em out." We felt very nervous as we walked out. We knew the officer was lied up all right but the guard who seemed to be the sharpest of the two, looked suspicious and seemed to doubt our story. We cast occasional glances backward to see if anybody was after us, thinking the guard might tell of his suspicions. It was understood with our messmates inside who were all the time watching us, that if our plan succeeded we would each bring in an armful of wood and lay it inside the line and have some excuse to call for our blankets, which we prepared for the occasion. We had our coats and pieces of hard-cooked mush enclosed inside our blankets. Page brought in his armful of wood, and called to his mate to bring him his blanket, as he wanted it to fill full of nice big chips. Marshall and myself wanted ours to bring some dry leaves to sleep on. These subterfuges also worked well. Now everything was ready for a long tramp. We then went out about a mile, threw up a big brush pile, crawled into this, and lay there until quite dark. While lying here, a rebel with a dog and gun passed close by. What the result would have been had that dog given one little sniff or bark, is hard to tell. Page said that was a Union dog. Major Briggs, Applebee and the other fellow went in and lifted their paroles, and the rebel never knew the difference. After it was good and dark we came out of the brush pile and made our first step for a 350 miles' journey for liberty.

CHAPTER II.

Our intention was to avoid all roads and highways, so we followed the bottom land up the Saluda river—a route with worse conditions for our business would have been hard to find. We soon found it necessary to march single file, one after the other. The night being usually dark, we could not see anything. While tramping along in this way the major, being in the lead, fell into one of those big open drain ditches, six or seven feet deep. We heard him fall, but it was some few minutes before we could understand what was up. The poor fellow!—it knocked the wind out of him. After he was able to straighten up, we pulled him out but it was some fifteen minutes before he was able to march again. He looked for a while, though, as if two of us would have to get it alone. It did not take us long, however, to get tired of this kind of marching, so about two o'clock we selected a hiding place in the woods and slept till day light.

After waking up in the morning we could hear the bells ring in the city of Columbia and discovered that we were only five miles from Camp Sorghum. We had tramped over twelve miles that night, but were in the bend of the river, which bore us back toward our starting point. We had eaten our mush, and it was about time for us to be after something else. We skirmished around for a while, and in coming to the edge of the woods saw a house on the other side of an open field and smoke coming out of the chimney. We watched it awhile, thinking we might see some darky. If so, we intended to beckon or call him to us, but no darky came in sight. About then we discovered a persimmon tree in the field between us and the house. We crawled out to this tree on all fours, and found it full of nice ripe fruit. We lay on our backs, for if we had stood up we might have been seen from the house, and knocked the persimmons down with stones. Better and nicer ones a person could not wish for. We ate all we wanted, and took some back to eat through the day. We wanted to find a boat in which to cross the river, so we started on our tramp before dark. We soon found one close by, which probably belonged to the people in the house. It was chained and locked to the root of a tree, but we jerked it until the chain was broken, and in a little while we were on the other side of the river. Letting the boat adrift, we struck out in search of a road, our experience of the night before having satisfied us.

After tramping through a willow thicket for a mile or so, we came to a road. This seemed to run crosswise to the direction we wished to go, but we followed it for a couple of miles. Finding, however, that we were going in the wrong direction, we retraced our steps. The road lying through a thick wood, and the night being very dark, it was impossible to see anything. All of a sudden we ran onto a darky—or he ran onto us—which party being scared the most it was hard to tell. He had been out to a party and was returning home, saying that he lived with his aunt. After he had told his story, we told him ours: that we had made our escape from prison, and were trying to get home, which he believed.

"Yes," he said, "he heard that the Yankees were all the time getting away."

The persimmons that we had eaten for breakfast, dinner, and supper had about done their duty, making it necessary that we look around for something else, so we tackled Moses, that being the darky's name. For awhile he tried to excuse himself, saying it was too far, etc. We offered to go with him, but this he declined to do, and justly too, we thought, for if the rebs had caught us it would have been bad for him, his aunt, and us, too. After some begging he finally consented to go, but first took us off the road a few rods, and left us by the side of a fallen tree, saying if we would stay there he would go. Somehow he began to doubt us, for he repeated the remark two or three times, "Will you stay here sure?" We promised him as many times that we would.

It was about midnight when he left us, so we lay there about two hours, the only comfort we had being the hopes of getting soon riding to [illegible]. But he was gone so long that we began to have misgivings about Moses, because he was so particular to have us "stay there sure," and began to think that he had gone back on us, and was going to have us captured. If we had not promised him so positively to remain there we would have left a dozen times, but Moses was true. He did come back with a large load of corn bread, some boiled pork, and a lot of roasted peanuts. How we would like to meet Moses now and give him a dozen or more meals that he would relish as much as we did his.

Moses was about twenty-two years of age, quite smart, and a good talker. Said he knew all about the country and the roads from there clear up to the Blue Ridge mountains, and of course he wanted to go along and "lead us through the promised land." We did not want him, and convinced him that it would be dangerous for all of us if caught. We found out afterward that he did know something about the roads and country, for in describing the roads to us he said that that when we got up near the mountains, in a narrow valley we would come to two jack-oak trees standing in the road just wide enough apart for a wagon to pass through, and right there the road forked: that we should take the left hand road. This place we found some twelve days afterward, just as Moses had described it. We used up about three hours of very interesting time with Moses, and after shaking hands with a hearty good-bye, which was from the heart, too, we left him. After making ten miles for the night we went into camp. Our journey most all the way was through a timber country, which made it favorable to hiding. In the fore part of the day we would sleep, the latter part of the day keep in hiding, and when the weather would permit, we would divest ourselves of our garments, and pick from them a small insect, a lineal descendent from Libby prison, vulgarly known as grey-backs, the Latin name of which we are unable to give.

At nine o'clock at night, November 30th, we left this place, and about ten o'clock came to quite a large plantation with a half dozen slave houses about the premises. In one of these there was a light, and it was full of negroes who were having a party. Moses spoke of this place, saying the darkies were all right, and that we should see Bob, who was the boss and would give us something to eat. We crept near the door, and after while a darky came out. Upon our calling him up to us and telling him a true story as to who we were, as we did every other negro we met, he went in and came out with Bob. Bob was glad to see us, at least he said so, and took us into the house. It was full of colored men, women, and children. They gave us our supper, after which we remained quite awhile, they dancing for us, and listening to our stories about the war, etc. They were quite anxious to hear about Abe Lincoln, and paid strict attention to all we had to say. Captain Page was quite a singer, and when he would sing "Kingdom Coming," it would bring down the house, and it would make us laugh to see the darkies laugh. Some of them would almost split their physiognomies in twain. Probably honors were equal. They were no more of a curiosity to us than we were to them. After awhile they sent a guide with us, who took us across a field to another Bob's house. Here we slept a few hours and got our breakfast, after which a Peter took us to the woods for a hiding place. Having spent so much time with the darkies we only made four miles that night. After dark we resumed our tramp, soon met a couple of darkies who gave us our supper, after which we made twelve miles further and camped.

The following night we went across a field to a road and after tramping awhile we lay down on the other side of the fence, expecting to stop some darky that might be going by. It being Saturday night we did not have to wait long, until one lone darky came along, whom we halted. He was not expecting anything and of course was considerably frightened. We confided our usual story to him, after which he took us to his sister's house. We soon got there, and as usual, and, also natural, we wanted something to eat. This colored woman, whose husband was then away some place to market, put us in the master's house, a nice two-story frame building. They, "the white folks," were gone, think she said to the war. As she left the room in which she left us she pulled the door to and locked it. This we did not like, but they had proved so true that we concluded not to offer any objections. After groping around the room in the dark we came across a lot of books, among them being an old school atlas. We lighted a match and tore out the page containing a map of North and South Carolina, and put it in one of our pockets. This was just what we wanted, and proved a fortune to us. We did not disturb anything else, and regretted this disturbance some, for fear that the darkies might suffer for it when the white folks came home. After a while we heard two reports of a gun. We raised the window and called our hostess. She did not know what it meant, but thought there was no danger. Soon her husband came home from the direction of the firing. He said there were two guards at the fork of the road; that they had stopped him, and had taken his eggs and some other things away from him; said they were firing just for fun. We wanted to slip out, but the darkies took it so cool that we concluded to wait for our suppers, which soon came in. They had killed and fried a chicken, which with corn meal, milk, etc., constituted our supper. We ate this in the dark for fear a light would expose us. After we had finished our meal the darky guided us through a field and past the picket posts. As soon as he left us we got onto a railroad track, and after marching ten miles we went into camp for the night in a field, getting into a deep gutter that the darkies had washed out. This was disagreeable and we should have avoided it. It was damp and we got our clothes and blankets daubed with sticky yellow clay. However, as the day had dawned, we were compelled to stay until dark.

CHAPTER III.

After dark, on December 4th, we came out of the gutter and after traveling awhile approached a large plantation where the last darkies said "Hamp" lived. We found that the white folks were at home and had not retired yet. This was the first white family we had found at home since our escape. However, there were very few white families living in the country. The men had all gone to the war, and the women and children had moved to the villages and cities to be better protected from the ravages of the war—a much different situation of affairs than was in the north. After evading the dogs and scaring up a lot of hogs, we flanked the "white folks'" house and got around into a shanty where we thought Hamp might live. We were bold enough to rap on the door and inquire for Hamp. He was there all right, and said he was glad to see us; took us in, and after talking awhile told us that a squad of rebel cavalry had passed that day, and advised us to be careful.

He sent another darky up the road to make inquiries, but he soon returned having learned nothing. He said that there were some other Yankee prisoners down in a field, so we, darkies and all, went down there, and sure enough there were five officers who had got out of Columbia since we had. After a pleasant talk, the darkies struck out to different houses and brought us our suppers. We thought best not to travel together, so after supper we went our ways as before. We heard nothing of them afterwards. After traveling sixteen miles we went into hiding.

For the next few nights we went along about as described, the excitement getting somewhat tame with us. We were generally fed and directed from one plantation to another by the darkies, of whom it may be said, "a bigger-souled people never lived." It rained for a few days and nights and being cold we had a hard time of it, though we made from twelve to eighteen miles a night. The longest tramp we made on our escape was twenty-eight miles one night and thirty another.

On the night of December 10th, a light maroon colored darky by the name of George, marched with us, as he was going our way to his home. He was the most intelligent and best educated of any of the colored men we had met. Arriving at his destination, he secreted us in the barn in the hay mow, where we had a good sleep until long after daylight. In looking around we found that George had taken down the ladder so that the children in hunting eggs could not come up and find us. After awhile the colored [illegible] brought us breakfast in big milk pails so as not to create suspicion among the white folks.

MIKE GETS HOMESICK.

In looking out, through the cracks in the barn, we saw a very large two-story house with fine surroundings. This being Sunday, and a very nice day, we sat there for quite a while watching the white folks and darkies outside. Presently two young ladies came out and capered around. We watched them for some time. White girls looked good to us, as we had not seen any for a long time nor spoken to any for over a year. How we would have liked to have been in a condition to spend the Sunday with them. But this could not be. We were fleeing Yankees in an enemy's country, uncouth, footsore, and ragged. If one had occasion to be homesick it was our little crowd sitting there in the barn that fine Sunday afternoon looking through the cracks and watching the white folks as they would come and go out and in the house.

As we have given an account of the most interesting part of our journey through South Carolina, where we were so kindly treated and protected by the negroes—much more so, probably, than we would be willing to do for them—we will leave out part of our journey through South Carolina, not wishing to make our story too tedious, and give a small account of that part of North Carolina, through which we were guided and fed by the Union men. On the night of December 14th, after marching fourteen miles, we went into hiding on the top of a high mountain peak from which we could look down and from whence we came as far as the eye could reach. Through the day the sun shone brightly, but the wind was so cold and chilly that we could sleep but little, although we so badly needed it. We could see a house way down in the valley in the direction we proposed to go, so we started on our march quite early. After going some distance we came to a log house on the left side of the road and a barn on the other side. The valley was narrow and the hills steep so we thought best to go right by. We knew that there would not be three men there, and less than that number could not take us. Just as we got between the house and barn, a lady who had been milking the cows straightened up somewhat surprised.

MEET A UNION MAN.

We asked her the way to Franklin. She came to us and was marking the way in the road when a bushy, stout looking man came out of the house to where we were. In a little while he said:

"Gentlemen, I guess I know who you are, and if mistaken I offer an apology. I hear that the Yankees are getting out of Columbia prison pretty fast and I think from your talk that you are some of them. If you are, you need not be afraid for you are in a Union settlement."

While we had been talking, the lady who had been milking came out with a dish of apples and passed them around. Then the old gentleman invited us into the house. After sampling about all of his supper we sat by the fire-place and talked until eleven o'clock. This valley was called Cashier's valley, and the man's name was Zachary. He gave us directions and names of Union men for thirty miles ahead, although he advised us to avoid Franklin. He said the rebel Colonel Thomas was there, with a company of rebel soldiers. In doing this it made our march about fifty miles longer. After we got ready to leave he advised us to go about three miles down the road where we would see a barn. He said his two boys were husking corn and were sleeping there. He told us to crawl in and sleep with the boys, and in the morning we would come to a house three miles further on where we would get breakfast. He said the man was in the rebel army, but the woman would get our breakfast, and we were then as free to continue our march in the daytime instead of nights. We took Zachary's advice, and slept with the boys. In the morning we wended our way to the house for breakfast. When within a hundred yards we saw a rebel major and two soldiers with guns standing on the porch.

TALK WITH A REBEL MAJOR.

We were too close to them to run, so all we could do was to face the music. They had arrived there that morning and had just finished breakfast. We called for ours, which the lady proceeded to prepare, and after having eaten it all of us sat on the porch and talked matters over. We told them a straight, true story, who we were, and what a hard time we had in getting this far to liberty. They seemed to show and express a little sympathy for us. The two majors got off by themselves and talked quietly for over an hour. What they said, Page and I did not know, but when their conversation was finished we bid one another good-bye and parted, they going their way and we ours. The last words the rebel major said to our major were, "I hope you will make a success of it." These fellows were up in this country gathering up cattle for beef for the rebel army, and it so happened that we ran together. They were good boys. They acknowledged that the Confederacy was on its last legs. General Sherman was even then making his famous march to to the sea.

Major Marshall was a Mason, and we suspicioned that the rebel major was also one, which had a great deal to do with our getting off so easily. When we visited Major Marshall some twenty-two years afterward at his magnificent home in Chattanooga, we broached the subject to him. He said there was "nothing in it." "The reason they did not take us was that we were not worth the taking, and it would have been too much trouble for them to have taken care of us."

We tramped the rest of the day with a little more humility than before, and had put twelve miles behind us when we came to the house at which Mr. Zachary advised us to stop. This man's name was Keuner, and he appeared to be glad to take care of us. We ate our suppers, chatted quite awhile, then climbed up a ladder to the loft and slept till [illegible] Keuner advised us to stay there a couple of days. He said he had a friend who would be there then, and would guide us through, as he talked of going that way anyhow, so we accepted his hospitality. We spent the day in an old log house of his, located up the side of the mountain on a small level piece of ground, and at night slept at his house on the left. Keuner was a clever man, and had plenty to eat. We would go down to the house a little early and chat with him and watch Mrs. Keuner get our supper.

COOKING IN A DUTCH OVEN.

There were no stoves in that country, but instead every house had a big fire-place in one end of it. Here the cooking and baking was done. The cooking was done in a Dutch oven which would be set over some hot coals, then more coals would be placed on the cover, and when it was properly done it would bake as well as any oven. We saw Mrs. Keuner bake the biscuits, then fry the meat in this oven for our supper, and after supper the children, before retiring, would wash their feet [illegible] it being nice and warm. In the morning it would again fry the meat and bake the biscuits. They did not, however, ask us to wash our feet. They knew where to draw the line.

CHAPTER IV.

The next day a man by the name of Wood, who was to be our guide, came up to our camp and spent the day with us. We wished since that we had not seen him, though we did make a good trade with him. We traded him our old boots that were worn out—except the red tops, which he took a fancy too—for his shoes, which were more serviceable, and assisted us through to our lines. We also cut the twelve brass buttons off our coat and sold them to him at five dollars a piece (rebel money). At eight o'clock at night we left our kind friends, the Keuners, and under the guidance of Wood continued our march. After going some ten miles we found that Wood did not know as much about the roads and country as we did. He did not know whether we were going north, south, east, or west. We did not either, for that matter, the night being quite dark. After tramping around for quite awhile without any success we spread our blankets and slept till morning, when by mutual consent we parted, Wood going back. On examining our haversacks after Wood was gone we found that he had stolen some little bone-work I had whittled out while in Libby prison: a couple of napkin rings, two collar buttons, and a watch charm. Many hours were spent in scraping and filing on these little trinkets, and if we had them now they could not be purchased at any price. Our negro guides would not have stolen them. We lay secreted all day, and at night resumed our march, but it was so dark and the country so mountainous that we only made a few miles and went into an old church for the rest of the night, but the weather being so cold we were unable to sleep. In the morning we started out on a dim road or path, when a man who gave his name as Watts overtook us. He knew Mr. Zachary and Mr. Keuner with whom we had stopped. We journeyed along together and finally got up on a high mountain ridge with only a path for a road. These are a part of the Blue Ridge or Smoky mountains, a broken, straggling lot of hills, running in spurs, peaks, and chains, with an altitude of over 6,000 feet, with valleys 2,000 feet below. These mountains are higher than anything east of the Mississippi river. We had often thought that if this country had been recently discovered, what an opening it would be for the magazine writer.

At last we came to the end of this mountain ridge, which has the local name of Chunky Gal, and we could look almost perpendicularly 2,000 feet below. It was so steep a mule could not travel it. Here Watts pointed out a Mr. Al Moore's house down in the valley below, and said that we should stop there, and that he was a Union man. After traveling thirteen miles for the day we came to Moore's. He had been having considerable trouble with the rebels, they having killed two of his boys and having carried off all his stock. He gave us our suppers, after which we slept in his barn, or fodder house, as all barns in the South were called. The next day we marched only a little way and stopped at a Mr. Patterson's, who was scared, and in return scared us. He said that the guerillas were around the country. So we went up the side of the mountain, and lay there all day. Don't believe there was a guerilla within fifteen miles of us.

The next day, after our scare was over we went on and came to a Mr. Ledford's house. Here we were at home and remained for five days, boarded at the house, and through the day we stayed up a ravine in his fodder house. It was now about time for us to do a little washing. We needed it, and the Ledfords knew it, too, besides, as we were to spend Christmas with them, a little fixing up was necessary. Mrs. Ledford furnished the soft soap and a big iron pot, so we went up to the fodder house and went at it. We had no change of clothing, so while washing we kept a sharp lookout down the valley so that no chance visitor should surprise us, or we them. The most important thing our clothes needed, so far as our peace and comfort were concerned, was to get the animated life out of them by a good scald. At least they would not stand much rubbing. The most durable garments we had were our overshirts, and these were made out of rice bags by cutting a hole in the bottom to slip over our heads and holes cut in the sides for our arms. You must remember that our other clothes were the ones we had on when taken prisoners over a year before. The modern tramp would have thrown them away long ago.

The next day we went down to Ledford's. His brother and nephew had also come over for dinner. Now we had a Christmas dinner all right. Among other things was venison, killed the day before, with an adjunct of apple brandy, called by them apple-jack. In these valleys they raised a great many apples which were worked up into brandy. The little worms, or distilleries, were about as numerous in this country as the old cider mills used to be in Pennsylvania, and most every house like Ledfords had a quantity of this apple-jack in store. It had one virtue. It was pure. The furniture and culinary departments of Ledfords was very scant. We sat on benches, ate from broken dishes with broken forks and wooden spoons. Table-cloths were also something they didn't have, but these inconveniences did not mar our pleasure any, and poor Mrs. Ledford, who was so good and kind, knew that apologies were not necessary. There was but one needle in the house, and this would go the rounds among the neighbors. These stories may seem a little doubtful, but they are nevertheless true. These were things that the South could not make, and all traffic with the North was cut off and had been for over three years.

On the 27th we left this Ledford's and after going some little distance spent the rest of the day and night with the other Ledford, and on the 28th we started on our journey again with Kit Ledford, a lad of about twenty-one years, as a refugee and guide, though the latter we did not need. We had heard of eleven more escaped prisoners over in another valley, so we went over to where they were, and found them very tired and foot sore. They had got out of Camp Sorghum some time after we did, but they had traveled much faster and with not half the interesting pleasure that we had. There were too many of them, but in our party there was just the right number to get around easily and extract what little fun there might be in the business.

We found young Zachary here also, one of the young men we had slept with in Cashier's valley some two weeks before. He wanted to come with us, but not having his father's consent, we would not take him. Including three refugees, our party now numbered sixteen. We then moved along as fast as our sore feet feet would allow, making some thirteen miles, and towards night going into a vacant house to sleep. The boys did not all have blankets, and as it was very cold we could not sleep much, so we concluded to continue our march until morning and then try and sleep through the day when it would be warmer. We marched four miles and camped in the woods, where we slept until night. Resuming our journey we flanked the town of Murphy and came to the Hiawassa river. We awakened the ferryman, who took us across. We paid him a little rebel money, and our thanks which were worth about as much as the money. The ferryman told us that a man by the name of Blythe would give us something to eat. We awakened him and he gave us all he had, which would have been enough for three or four, but did not go far for so many. We marched a little further and went into another vacant house by the roadside, but could not sleep much. In the morning we found the ground covered with six inches of snow, unusual for this country. We marched the rest of the day, and at night came to a little village. Here the citizens distributed us around in different houses. Page, Marshall, and myself in one house. They gave us a good supper. We apologized some for our ragged and dirty condition, and told our hostess that if she would give us a couple of quilts we would sleep on the floor and not soil or pollute the beds. She remarked that the sheets were easier washed than the quilts, so we piled into bed—the best we have had for years.

It was fortunate for us that we were getting towards home, for in the morning the thermometer registered at zero. They said it was never so cold there before this. We were now in Union territory, and only nine miles to Sweet Water, a station on the Chattanooga & Knoxville railroad. In going there we found the road very circuitous around a low bottom land, so we took across the bottom, and while doing this we saw the first Union picket post a mile or so to the left of us, and to our surprise they let us pass in without being questioned. We arrived at the station at two o'clock P. M., January 1, 1865, finding the place guarded by a company of Union soldiers. The captain in command asked us how we got around the picket post. We told him that we flanked them, that we saw them, and they saw us. He sent out another party and had them come in, when they were probably censured.

We waited at the station until about four o'clock, when the passenger train came along. We made a rush to get aboard, but here we were snubbed, the first snubbing we had received for a good while. A guard stood on each platform, and it was his duty to let no one on unless he had a pass and a ticket. These we did not have. We had courage and perseverance, and enough of it to get us on the platform. Captain Page, who was generally known to have his own way, pushed the guard to one side and went in, the rest of us following. Still, there was no one to blame. The guard was only doing his duty, and when the conductor came around we told him our story that had now been repeated over a hundred times. This was equal to a pass to Knoxville, where we arrived about dark, and reported to the post commander who gave us supper once again at the expense of the United States government, and at bed time put us in the soldiers' hospital and gave us each a nice little cot to sleep on. But we were so elated and light hearted over our successful escape and prospects of soon being at home that we could not sleep much. The joy of a year had come to us.

The next morning he gave us each an entire new suit of blue soldier's clothes, but before discarding our old ones we put them on and went up town in search of a photographer. No caravan in passing through the streets would have excited any more curiosity than we did. There were twelve of us who had our pictures taken in a group, four of our party for some reason or other not being with us. This picture can now be seen at the writer's home. This picture can also be seen in Lossing's History of the Rebellion. He narrates on it as "a group of refugees who fled from west North Carolina to escape persecution, and came into our lines for protection." Mr. Lossing was off his base. After having the picture taken we went back to the hospital and had a bath, after which we put on our new clothes, and we certainly did feel queer. On January 3rd, we received transportation, each for his destination. We arrived at our home in Marshalltown, Iowa, January 11, 1865, being gone just three years and six months to the day.

[THE END.]

(WE very much regret that we are unable to give the author's picture from the Prisoner's Group. It was the intention, but an accident prevented it. See portrait on page 73.)

NOTE: October 25th, 1897: There have been many hindrances to the issuing of this book, and many comrades have doubtless thought it was "nit." But not so, here we are. Since the subject matter of this edition went to the printer, our Reunion of 1897 has come and gone. Twenty-eight comrades were present.
